

Seems to me this proposed media change is awful public policy--done quickly, with scant public input. Makes me wonder--and I'm hardly the only one--what you all are hiding. I read the William Safire op-ed piece the other day in the New York Times, which only increased my anger. It appears like it's another insiders' benefit--otherwise you'd let this play out--and it's symptomatic of why so many other people are so angry too. So please count me in as another very unhappy voice. You're going about this wrongly on so many levels that I guess you have no choice but to cram this through as quickly as possible. I'm sorry to have to write this, and am sorry to have to face the further consolidation of media, which will inevitably result. I'm sorry, too, to have to go farther and farther afield to get news sources I can actually trust. Your agency I can't trust at all. Otherwise you'd listen to the public that you are supposedly representing.
